HOME OF ORPINGTON

R. H. WHITTEN TELLS METHODS OF HANDLING HIS HANDSOME WHITE BIRDS

On a ranch of three acres on Kenneth road, North Glendale, looking down from a considerable elevation among the foothills, R. H. Whitten breeds his famous White Orpingtons, which are known to breeders from as far east as New York. On this ranch, which is an ideal place for chicken breeding inasmuch as it lies on a slope sufficient to keep it fairly dry even in the wettest weather, Mr. Whitten has created a poultry home that is unique in many ways.

Numerous houses afford means of keeping separate the birds in their various stages. The houses are the "open front" style. Perfectly water tight and weather tight these houses are open in front, affording a perfect circulation of air to the birds and helping to preserve that vigor without which Mr. Whitten believes there can be neither good layers nor good table birds. He believes in making the birds take plenty of exercise. To this end everything tends. The different dry mashes that are fed to the birds are placed in feed boxes that compel the birds to exert themselves to get the grain into their systems. This he calls the "cafeteria system" because the bird has to help itself. Every yard is furnished with a drinking system on the "drip" plan. The water constantly drips into a small drinking cup that is placed in a pipe inserted about three feet into the ground. This carries off all the surplus water and keeps the place dry. These drips are cleaned about once a week.

Beside the water drip stands a dish with sour milk. Of this the chickens are extremely fond. "The lactic acid contained in the sour milk is the best preventive and corrective of intestinal trouble that I have ever known," said Mr. Whitten. "I scarcely ever have any trouble of that kind. During the past year I have lost only two hens from intestinal trouble. You see these birds in the scratching yard. We throw in enough grain once a day to enable the birds to fill themselves. Next morning they have to scratch hard to get enough grain to keep themselves going. This is an excellent method. It gives the birds exercise and keeps them busy.

"Here is a novel method of breaking up a setting hen. I suspend this coop, as you see, in the center of the scratching yard. This gives a free circulation of air all round the hen and cools the distended blood vessels in her breast. The swinging coop makes her hold on with her feet and occupies her attention. In two days she forgets about her desire to "set." The same purpose is fulfilled in the stationary coops but it takes generally three days to break up hens confined in them.

"There is the real Orpington type. The back broad and low and the broad spread tail. I can always get that type by breeding a "V" backed rooster with those cushion backed hens. There is certain to be a proportion of show birds out of such breeding. Vigor is what I aim at. If the hens are not vigorous they will not lay. I have about 1000 Orpingtons altogether. I get an average price of $1 an egg and $1.50 a chick a day old. Some of the poorer kinds run about 10 cents an egg and 20 cents a day-old chick.

"Some of my hens have a record of as high as 208 eggs a year; 181 eggs a year is about the average of the whole flock. Any bird below 144 eggs we do not keep. Many of these birds are show birds and have taken first prizes at the big shows. Here are a number of cockerels in separate pens for selling purposes. You see the same system runs through the housing of these birds. They have their open front house, their scratching pen, their cafeteria dry mash, and their individual drinking cup. I raised 300 cockerels last year and sold them all for breeding purposes with the exception of four, which I still have.

"I also had 800 cockerels for fancy breeding. The strong birds always come out to the light in the incubators and we thus know them. Many of these young birds, although not considered the best, are gradually picking up and becoming so good that it will be difficult to know the difference between them and the best ere long. They are kept here with these artificial brooders, which I prefer to the mother hen. The chicks are kept at the same temperature and the heat is easily regulated. When you see the little heads sticking out all round the brooder you know that the temperature is right.

"Here is our system of trap-nests. This is how we tell how many eggs our hens are laying. The laying hen

WINTER ON DESERT

T. H. ROSENBERGER TELLS OF BITTER WEATHER OUT ON THE MOJAVE WASTE

"When people speak of the Mojave desert of California their imaginations conjure up visions of burning wastes of yellow sands, gaunt yuccas and cacti raising their skeleton arms to a hot and copper sky, howling coyotes and human bones bleaching under a pitiless sun," said Mr. T. H. Rosenberger of 147 S. Brand boulevard. "All of that is true at some time; but some of it is not true all the time. Some time ago I brought my family back again to Glendale, from Trona, out on the desert, because it was bitterly cold and there was a considerable depth of snow on the ground. Since I left Trona more than a foot of snow has fallen at Searles, a short distance from the mine I am working. That storm was one of the worst experienced in that quarter.

"This need not be wondered at. There is always snow, more or less, on the desert in winter. The whole valley through which the California-Nevada railway runs is at times white with snow and in the higher regions the fall it naturally greater. The Mojave desert is from 1800 to 2500 feet above the level of the sea and in spots is as high as 4000 feet and more.

"The mine which I am working lies above the potash works at Trona. We have a good smelting proposition and are now taking out, in the course of our working, enough ore to pay for development and all other expenses. I am shipping the ore to Midvale, Utah, and the returns have been very much larger than I anticipated. When this development work is finished we will have a most valuable mine. The ore greatly resembles that which made the fortunes of the Cerro Gordo owners.

"The American Trona company is doing extensive work at the famous potash lake. Litigation has apparently not tied up the work. The litigants apparently think it is better to encourage the development of the potash deposits and trust to some kind of a settlement. The company has spent $2,000,000 already in development work and it looks as though they would have to spend $2,000,000 more before they can expect returns. When the returns come, however, they will repay all this and much more.

"There was quite a sensation on the desert when the tungsten mill at Atolia burned down. The owners of the mill were making money very fast. The tungstic acid is used in the manufacture of munitions and tungsten-steel is in great demand. The ore has advanced to $45 a unit from $7 and in the case of the 70 per cent ore at Atolia as high as $60 a unit has been obtained. A unit is 20 pounds; so that a single pound of tungsten ore, in this case scheelite, is worth $3.

"The consequence of this advance was that "high-grading" became common. When the stealing of twenty pounds of ore meant $60 to the thief it might easily be conjectured that there were some who could not resist the temptation. The high-grading went on for some time and occasioned a great deal of trouble and bad feeling. It will now be 90 days before the mill can be rebuilt and the enormous profits have ceased for the time being; so has the high-grading as far as the Atolia property is concerned. I am only here for a few days and will return again to the desert, but will be back to Glendale to see my family now and again."

CONGREGATIONAL BROTHERHOOD

The men of the Congregational church last evening held their monthly meeting. Mr. W. J. Button presided. After a brief business session in which plans for future work of the organization were made, a program of music and stories were told by the men.

Each man was expected to tell a humorous tale. The evening revealed much heretofore unknown talent among the men as entertainers. Men laughed and cried at the wit and pathos displayed.

Had rewards been given no doubt the "Blue Ribbon" would have been carried away by Mr. S. W. Alvord, by his unique and original story of "Telepathy and Doughnuts."

Several new members were received. This Brotherhood cordially invites men of the community to attend the meetings of the Brotherhood.

RAIDERS CAPTURE BRITISH STEAMER

GERMANS SAIL AFRICAN LINER APPAN INTO PORT AT NORFOLK, VIRGINIA

(Special Service to Glendale Evening News)

NORFOLK, Va., Feb. 1.—German raiders today sailed into port here with the captured British steamer Appan of the African line. The Appan was reported lost off the coast of Morocco some time ago and was believed to have been sunk by a Teuton submarine. The raiders state that they captured the vessel near the Canary islands, January 15. They number 22 in all and state that they are a prize crew which was placed aboard to bring the passengers in safety to land. They say also that they brought the vessel here knowing that it would be impossible to enter a home port.

The passengers said that the Appan was captured after a fight on its deck in which two sailors were killed.

The German crew said that before capturing the Appan the raider took seven other Allied vessels and seized 150 prisoners. These were transferred to the Appan and brought here. The Appan will be interned. The prize crew will be paroled and the 150 passengers liberated.

A message thrown from the porthole of the liner Appan this afternoon revealed that the name of the German commerce raider was the Moewe. The message stated that the raider started from the Kiel canal and ran the British blockade. She carries a heavy battery of 10-inch guns.

On motion this ordinance was declared read for the first and second times and laid over till the next regular meeting for the third and final reading.

RISING IN CEYLON

ENGLISH LETTER TELLS HOW THE GERMANS URGED NATIVES TO REBELLION

In an interesting letter which Miss Ina Whitaker, 208 W. Ninth street, recently received from a friend in England the story of trouble in Ceylon is told with details that have not been made public in this country. Possibly the strict censorship managed to cut out some of the particulars. The writer confidently asserts that before long the Teutons will abandon the war, Austria leading in the withdrawal. This may be taken for what it is worth.

The writer goes on to state that both the London Times and The Daily Mail, which are owned by Lord Northcliffe, formerly Mr. Harmsworth, "are entirely discredited and that both of them have been burned on the Stock Exchange.

"As for Ceylon," says the author of the letter, "this much is true: A revolution got up by the Germans did take place there and for a little while got a footing. The end of it was than more than 300 natives were courtmartialed and shot, and a good thing, too. There was for a day or two some concern about the safety of outlying planters' families; but I believe none were injured.

"The Freudenbergs took a great part in the uprising. They actually used the lighthouse to signal to the German cruiser, the Emden, and supplied her with oil, stores and all necessary articles. You know what an unsuspicious, genial person the ordinary Anglo-Cingalese is. These Freudenbergs took advantage of this disposition of the English planting population. One of the Freudenbergs is married to Judge Middleton's daughter who is now more German than the Germans and interned in Australia. This relationship meant nothing to the German plotters. They took advantage of it in every way to obtain information.

"One of the Freudenbergs had in his pocket his appointment as Governor of Ceylon, signed by the kaiser, when the hand of power fell upon him. What ever has come to these crazy people? These events are long since past and calm and prosperity reigns in Ceylon as never before."

The letter goes on to tell how the war has benefited the rubber plantations. The demand for rubber for war purposes is enormous and the price of that material has advanced considerably. "Rubber is doing splendidly," says the letter. "This is a good thing for me since we have a large and profitable holding of rubber and for the present, owing to the high exchange, my Russian income does not reach me. Tea commands the highest prices it has ever done and that is a good thing for Ceylon, where the tea plantations are the backbone of the island."

ILLINOIS STATE PICNIC

Those who remember the long list of Illinois people who are resident in Glendale, which was published in The Glendale Evening News some months ago, will realize that the representatives of the great Central State have colonized Southern California to some purpose. The Illinois State society, which endeavors to gather together as many as possible of these former Illinoisans, asks this paper to inform the California-Illinoisans that they will enjoy a good time if they come to the Midwinter Picnic, to be held by that State society at Long Beach, Feb. 12. "Bring your pumpkin pies and chicken," says the circular, "and make this a grand reunion. There will be a brief program, but rich in music and speeches. Each county will have headquarters and registration cards. Coffee will be furnished free to those who buy official badges. Any other information will be furnished by Dr. G. H. Galbraith, at Long Beach."

VERNON SNIVELY

His many friends will be happy to know that in a telegram received at police headquarters, Los Angeles, at 9:56 this a. m., Mr. Snively states that Vernon's temperature was one degree lower and conditions favorable. Mr. Snively also remarked that the weather in El Paso was bitterly cold.

FAILURE OF BRITISH DIPLOMACY

It is doubtful if the world has seen a greater failure than that which has attended British diplomacy throughout the war in Europe. It was manifest in the beginning that it would be necessary to win Bulgaria; yet the chance for enlisting that nation on the side of the Allies was allowed to pass. Mr. Asquith in the house of commons said that while so far as he knew Bulgaria had no hostile intentions; still if she did have Britain would be forced to act. That was on Oct. 1, the day that Bulgaria mobilized, when also it was no secret that the Bulgarians intended to join the Germans.

That was bad enough in the case of Bulgaria; but it was much worse in the case of Turkey. Turkey owes its very existence to Britain, which has on various occasions stood between Turkey and destruction. Britain was the nursing mother of the Turks. When the Russians were hammering at the gates of Constantinople Lord Beaconsfield, the British premier, defied them to enter. That saved Turkey. Even recently British influence was so great in Turkey that the Turks might easily have been brought to throw in their influence with the Allies; but the British ambassador knew nothing of the Turkish language. He was also jealous, excessively jealous, of Mr. Fitzmaurice, the one man in the embassy who knew Turkish, and got him ousted from his position. The consequence was that the Germans, who had kept specialists in knowledge of Turkey and her language and dialects swept the field and swept Turkey into the German fold.

Again the British, from lack of information, blundered into the gigantic fiasco of the Dardanelles campaign. Meanwhile Germany had made a rush to break the ring around her and succeeded by getting Bulgaria on her side in getting a clear way through disheveled and battered Servia to Constantinople. This was a new revival for the Turks.

In similar manner British diplomacy failed in Greece. Greece owes her existence as an independent nation to Britain and France. Britain has always stood for the integrity of Greek territory and has aided that nation to get more territory; yet at the moment when Greece should be throwing her well-disciplined troops to the aid of the Allies she remains neutral and her king openly favors the Germans.

These things are part and parcel of the pitiably weak British diplomacy that has always amazed the world. No longer can the British papers laugh at what has been called "the shirtsleeves diplomacy" of the United States or at what has been stigmatized as the "grape-juice" policy of Bryan. They will have enough to do to clear up the pitiable results of their own ignorant and halting diplomacy in the near East, which might easily yet cost them their empire.

DISCIPLINE OF JAPANESE SOLDIERS

Nothing is more characteristic of the Japanese soldier than his discipline. The fine discipline of the Japanese was a matter of wonder to all foreign observers during the Russo-Japanese war. It was said of them that in all their campaigning in Manchuria not even as much as an egg was stolen by the Japanese army. The reason for this is the enforcement of the emperor's rules for conduct in the army. The mikado's "Rescript on Education" has been published recently. It contains the essence of that discipline that has made the Japanese army one of the best disciplined military bodies in the world.

This rescript consists of five articles. The preamble calls on the soldiers to look to the emperor, the supreme commander-in-chief, as their head. "If the majesty and power of our empire be impaired you share with us the sorrow; if the glory of our arms shine resplendent we will share with you the honor."

In the first article the soldier and the sailor are called on to cultivate the spirit of grateful service to their country. "Remember that, as the protection of the State and the maintenance of its power depend upon the strength of its arms, the growth or decline of this strength much affect the nation's destiny for good or evil. The defenders of the country are forcibly reminded that 'duty is weightier than a mountain, while death is lighter than a feather.'"

Propriety is the next item in the soldier's duty. They are organized in grades. There are even in the same grade differences in seniority of service according to which juniors should submit to their seniors. They are cautioned never to treat their superiors with disrespect or inferiors with harshness.

Japanese soldiers and sailors are counseled to esteem valor. "Without valor," says the rescript, "our subjects would be unworthy of their name." They are likewise instructed never to despise an inferior enemy or fear a superior, but to do their duty as soldier or sailor. This, says the rescript, is true valor. In their daily intercourse they are urged to set gentleness first and to aim to win the love and esteem of others.

The soldier and sailor should highly value faithfulness and righteousness. Without these qualities, neither soldier nor sailor can remain in the ranks a single day. They must be able to discern right and wrong with reference to fundamental principles.

Lastly the emperor counsels his army and navy to make simplicity their aim. He says that without simplicity they become effeminate, and frivolous and acquire a taste for luxurious and extravagant ways; finally grow selfish and sordid and sink to the last degree of baseness so that neither loyalty nor valor can avail to save them from the contempt of the world.

For putting these five articles into practice, says the emperor, the all-important thing is sincerity. These five articles are the soul of Japanese soldiers and sailors and sincerity is the soul of these articles.

This is all extremely interesting and many might observe this teaching with profit. The kind of men bred in these principles were the men who stormed and took the 250 forts of Port Arthur and after being almost decimated at the trenches of Mukden, came to their commander and besought him for the honor of Japan to allow them to try once more. Being given permission with great reluctance, they swept over the barbed wire and the almost impregnable earthworks of the Russians and triumphed in the very face of defeat. Principles that make great nations are worthy of study. As will be seen they are the same in every land.

THE WAYS OF THE LOON

Henry D. Thoreau went to live alone on the shore of Walden pond, near Concord, Mass., and he wrote a book called "Walden," telling all about his life in the woods. This is how he describes his chase of the "silly loon," which he wanted to observe near at hand. He says:

"As I was paddling along the north shore one very calm October afternoon, for such days especially they settle on to the lakes, like the milkweed down, having looked in vain over the pond for a loon, suddenly one, sailing out from the shore towards the middle a few rods in front of me, set up his wild laugh and betrayed himself. I pursued with a paddle and he dived, but when he came up I was nearer than before. He dived again, but I miscalculated the direction he would take, and we were 50 rods apart when he came to the surface this time, for I had helped to widen the interval; and again he laughed loud and long, and with more reason than before. He maneuvered so cunningly that I could not get within half a dozen rods of him. Each time, when he came to the surface, turning his head this way and that, he cooly surveyed the water and the land, and apparently chose his course so that he might come up where there was the widest expanse of water and at the greatest distance from the boat. It was surprising how quickly he made up his mind and put his resolve into execution. He led me at once to the widest part of the pond, and could not be driven from it. . . .

"It was a pretty game, played on the smooth surface of the pond, a man against a loon. Suddenly your adversary's checker disappears beneath the board, and the problem is to place yours nearest to where his will appear again. Sometimes he would come up unexpectedly on the opposite side of me, having apparently passed directly under the boat. So long-winded was he . . . that when he had swum farthest he would immediately plunge again, nevertheless; and then no wit could divine where in the deep pond, beneath the smooth surface, he might be speeding his way like a fish, for he had time and ability to visit the bottom of the pond in its deepest part. . . . How surprised must the fishes be to see this ungainly visitor from another sphere speeding his way amid their schools! Yet he appeared to know his course as surely under water as on the surface, and swam much faster there. Once or twice I saw a ripple where he approached the surface, just put out his head to reconnoiter, and instantly dived again. I found that it was as well for me to rest on my oars and wait his reappearing as to endeavor to calculate where he would rise; for again and again, when I was straining my eyes over the surface one way, I would suddenly be startled by his unearthly laugh behind me. But why, after displaying so much cunning, did he invariably betray himself by his loud laugh? Did not his white breast enough betray him? He was indeed a silly loon, I thought . . . Occasionally when he had balked me most successfully and come up a long way off, he uttered a long-drawn unearthly howl, probably more like that of a wolf than any bird; as when a beast puts his muzzle to the ground and deliberately howls. This was his looning,—perhaps the wildest sound that is ever heard here, making the woods ring far and wide."

JUST WHAT PEAT IS

Peat is a brownish fibrous material which, when it is wet, resembles black clay. In many parts of the world it is found in bogs, is dug and burned as fuel. It is very generally used in this way by the people of Ireland and those of the northern part of the islands of Scotland. Behind the huts of these districts, one may often see neat piles of black peat stocked up for later use. Peat smoke, curling out of the cottage chimneys, makes a thin bluish vapor; just when the evening meals are preparing, the country seems to be covered with a faint blue haze, like that which drifts over the faces of the mountains.

The peasants cut the "turf," as they call it, from the bogs out on the moors and hillsides. They cut a trench about a foot deep, using a peculiarly shaped spade which the Irish call a "slane;" this spade digs out sods from three to four feet deep. When one layer has been removed, a deeper one is dug, and so on until water fills the ditch. The sods are allowed to drain and are then stacked in little round heaps to dry in the air; this drying process requires about six weeks. Sometimes peat is carried by the women in "creels," which are deep baskets made to fit the shape of a person's back. Very often one comes upon a woman leaning up against a stone wall, on which she is resting her creel while she improves the time by knitting busily. Peat does not blaze when it burns; it only smolders and emits that same filmy blue smoke which one comes to associate with the country, Ireland and the Scotch highlands.

HONOR TO HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER

What is rather an unusual honor to come to a High School of the standing of the Glendale institution is that which has been tendered to Prof. Frank R. Morris, instructor of mathematics. Prof. Morris has just received an invitation from Dr. Charles H. Rieber, dean of the Summer school of the University of California, to act as one of the instructors in the Berkeley Summer school next summer. Prof. Morris is expected to give two courses—one in solid geometry and one in graphic algebra.

Up till now it has been the custom to select as instructors in the University Summer school the best college instructors both from California and eastern states. Principal Moyse says that this is the first time that such a mark of distinction has been given a school of the size of Glendale High school. Mr. Morris has accepted the summer position, which brings with it something more than the empty honor.

A parliamentary drill will precede the program. Every patron, as well as those interested in the school, are urged to be present.

PASTOR'S BIRTHDAY REUNION

On the occasion of his birthday Monday evening, the Rev. R. Warren Mottern, pastor of the First English Evangelical Lutheran church, held a reunion of the men of his congregation, at his residence, 340 S. Central avenue. The entertainment took the form of a review of the work done in Glendale since Mr. Mottern's pastorate began. The Rev. W. S. Dysinger of Los Angeles, who was present as a guest of honor, paid a graceful tribute to Mr. Mottern for the remarkable work that he has done in building up the church in Glendale, where the congregation has increased nearly 100 per cent and the Bible School trebled its numbers. Mr. Dysinger also gave a most interesting talk on the Lutheran church in America. He told of the 70,000,000 Lutherans in the world and of the 13,000,000 baptized Lutherans in the United States and showed how the Swedish, Danish, Norwegian, German and Dutch branches of the church had allowed many of their young people to drift away out of membership or into other churches simply because they clung to the mother tongues of those lands and ignored the lingual necessities of the young generation.

He also told many interesting facts about his pastorates in Pennsylvania and some other States. The speaker concluded his address by an earnest appeal to the men to make religion their business. Part of the evening was spent in guessing games and Prof. Laichinger entertained the company with songs and music as did also Miss Elizabeth Mottern.

Those present were: The Rev. W. S. Dysinger, Prof. Laichinger, Mr. V. S. Frazer, Carl Andressen, Walter Andresen, G. F. Dougherty, J. W. Imler, George Anderson, Carl Anderson, W. A. Anderson, J. St. Clair, George Mott, R. E. Bryson and Dr. A. E. Johnson.

HIGH SCHOOL DEBATE

Miss Ethel West will represent Glendale Union High School in the first extemporaneous debate in the Extemporaneous division of the State debating league to be held in California. As Glendale's representative, Miss West will speak at the Lincoln High School in Los Angeles against Lincoln, Polytechnic, and Manual Arts high schools of Los Angeles and Santa Monica High School.

The general subject for debate is "Vocational Education" in High Schools. The exact proposition is to be opened 30 hours before the time of debate and at the same time, the side of the proposition to be supported and the order of speakers will be made known.

Prof. W. D. Root, debating coach, states that Miss West is preparing an excellent debate and that Glendale stands an excellent chance of winning the contest. The debate will take place Friday evening at 8 o'clock in the auditorium of Lincoln High School, Los Angeles.

Saturday evening, Glendale and Huntington Park will debate to settle the tie of the recent league meetings. The teams winning will contest with Pasadena for the silver cup and medals presented by the Southwestern Debating league.

The question to be debated is: "Resolved, That the Defense of the United States Against Foreign Aggression Would Be Furthered by Changing to One Year the Term of Voluntary Enlistment in the Regular Army."

Howard Stickney and Samuel Durand make up Glendale's picked team to debate at Huntington Park, where special judges will be on hand to award two scholarships to the University of Southern California Law school.

At Glendale, Frank Bridgeford and Joseph Maier will defend the home school against the Huntington Park second team.

An endeavor is being made to secure forty student rooters to accompany the team to Huntington Park and back the boys to the very limit in order to secure the championship. Glendale has had a very successful year in the debating field and there is no reason in Prof. Root's mind why Glendale cannot win from Huntington Park and Pasadena.

DOG AN ACCOMPLISHED ACTOR

John Jasper, a five-year-old mongrel dog from Richmond, Va., has made a hit in the New York play, "Young America"; he is a real star of the play, and gets much applause, which he acknowledges by trotting calmly out to the footlights and—all but bowing politely. When Jasper was only 10 months old he knew enough tricks to earn $35 a week in vaudeville for his master; he has since earned $500 a week. When he was two years old he knew the meanings of 300 words, and now his vocabulary is much increased.

"Come out and shake hands with the gentleman," said Mr. Taylor, Jasper's master, referring to a reporter from one of the New York papers. He spoke in a low voice, with no hint of a command, but the dog instantly came out of his retreat and offered his paw.

"Go and look out of the window," said his master; whereupon the dog walked across the room, stood on his hind legs and looked down into the street. When asked to put his paw on the knob of the door, to look at himself in the glass, to speak to himself, to close the door, to remove the visitor's hat and to pull the visitor's handkerchief from his pocket, Jasper obeyed with speed and intelligence. He made it very evident that he does understand what is said to him.

In the play Jasper is the pet of the boy hero, and in an attempt to protect his master he fights two policemen. Mr. Taylor, his real master, plays the part of one of the policemen, and for a time Jasper was unwilling to attack him.

"I began rehearsing him only a week before the play was produced," said Mr. Taylor. "He was perfect in his rehearsals, because he could remember every direction. There was just one difficulty—I could not get him at first to give a realistic exhibition of a fight with me. He wanted to chase the other policeman. But when he found I really wanted him to fight me he did it all right."

Jasper frequently goees out for a walk on Broadway, when he wears a big collar of rhinestones, so that people will recognize him.

SELECTING SHOES FOR SPRING WEAR

There are several points to consider in selecting from the vast assortment of shoe styles; and, of course, the two most important points are comfortable supports and smart lasts. There is also the question of color applied to the size of the foot, which question receives far too little attention.

The new shoes show a decided point at the toes, and to be quite comfortable one should choose a size longer than in the shoe with the rounded toe and the short vamp. Even with the extra length, the elegance of line is not apparent if the shoe looks wide across the ball of the foot. In that case insist that the salesman try on a shoe which is a half size wider; the difference in width is only an eighth of an inch, yet it gives added grace of line and comfort.

Women seem to forget that white increases the apparent size of the object it covers.

By all means keep to the high dark blue leather boot, or one of dark gray or black for street wear, with dark clothes; and cling to the bronze slipper with hose to match, or the neutral gray suede which is again so popular.

The white silk stocking with the black patent leather pump is most trying to any foot, especially if worn with any other than a white costume, or one where white lace appears at the bottom and into which the stocking may merge.

TREATMENT FOR HARD PINE FLOOR

Experiment has proved that oak "filler" may be used upon hard pine after the pine has been rubbed smooth, says the Ottawa Citizen. The "filler" should be of the dark oak tint. If the pine floor is waxed on the day after the oak "filler" is applied the effect will be that of a good brown floor.

GLENDALE BRITISH RED CROSS

Considerable activity is characterizing the work of the Glendale branch of the British Red Cross. That society met Monday at the home of Mrs. Whitaker, 208 W. Ninth street, at 2 p. m. There was a good attendance of members. Several new members were added. The ladies of the society spent the afternoon in working for the aid of the wounded and of the men in the trenches. A number of donations of work were received as follows: Miss Simpson, Mrs. Gleason, Mrs. Rice, Mrs. Cory, Miss Whitaker, Mrs. Mitchell, Mrs. Eley. The articles contributed consisted of a variety of capes, coats, mufflers, bandages, wristlets, underclothing, vests and socks. The next meeting will be held Monday, Feb. 7, at the same place. It was announced that the Los Angeles branch is to give a bazaar in aid of the Red Cross work, Feb. 25 and 26, in the Shrine auditorium. All the nations of the Allies are working diligently for this event. Those having work they wish to donate may leave it at the office of Mrs. Nanno Woods, 1111 W. Broadway.

HOW TO MAKE IMPERIAL CAKES

The making of good cake is a knack to be acquired only after much practice. Even old cooks who have won praise for their cake-making must keep in constant practice. In studying the rudiments of cake-making, the beginner should never attempt anything unusual until after she has learned to make perfect plain, pound, sponge and raisin cakes. When these turn out just as they should and she becomes so well acquainted with her materials that the result is a certainty, then she may try some of the imperial cakes.

The following recipes, some of them famous, may be safely tried by the cook who has turned out her perfect loaf of plain cake.

Solid Chocolate Cake—Cream together one cup of sugar and a half cup of butter; add two beaten eggs, a half cup of milk, two teaspoons of baking powder and flour enough to make a stiff batter. While stirring the batter, let boil on the stove one cup of sugar, the yolks of two eggs, half a cake of grated chocolate and a half cup of milk. After this has boiled, stir it into the thick batter, heat all together and turn into a shallow buttered pan. Bake until done, testing with a straw, and, when cold, frost with a soft white frosting. If desired, one may make layers of the cake and use chocolate filling and frosting, garnishing the top with marron glaces cut in halves.

Angel Cake—Whip the whites of twelve eggs to a firm stiff froth, sift in gradually one and a half cups of granulated sugar, then one cup of flour which has been sifted four times and one level teaspoon of baking powder. Add also two teaspoons of vanilla flavoring and, after quickly mixing, turn the dough into an ungreased chimney pan and bake forty minutes in a steady, moderate oven. When baked, invert the pan over a plate, resting its edges on two small cups. As the cake cools, it will become detached from the pan.

Ohio Fruit Cake—One pound of seeded raisins, one pound of washed currants, one quarter of a pound of thinly sliced citron, one pound of brown sugar, one cup of butter, four well beaten eggs, one cup of sour milk, four cups of flour that has been sifted three times, one grated nutmeg, one tablespoon of cinnamon, and a dessertspoon of cloves; beat these ingredients thoroughly into a smooth dough and lastly add one dessertspoon of baking soda. Do not mix the soda with milk but sift it in dry. Turn the dough into a well-buttered chimney pan and bake in a brick oven until done, testing the cake with a straw.

Cream together one-half pound of butter with a half pound of sugar; add the beaten yolks of 16 eggs, two and a half ounces of grated almonds, two and a half ounces of browned bread crumbs, two and a half ounces of sifted flour, the soft center of half a vanilla bean, a quarter cake of sweet chocolate grated, and last of all the egg whites stiffly beaten. Turn into the pans and bake in a moderate oven from 20 to 25 minutes. When cold, split and cut into squares as directed above. For the filling of the cake, use a half pound of butter and a half cake of sweet chocolate grated, melt together, then beat to a rich cream and fill the squares. For the frosting grate a quarter cake of sweet chocolate, add one-half cup of sugar and a quarter cup of water; let it boil up, then beat until cool and creamy when it is ready to spread over the cake.

Washington Cake—Rub together two cups of butter and three cups of sugar until light and creamy; add five well-beaten eggs gradually, then one cup of milk and four cups of carefully sifted flour with two teaspoons of baking powder. Next add one cup of stoned raisins, a half cup of well-washed currants, a quarter of a cup of chopped citron and one teaspoon each of extract of nutmeg and cinnamon. Beat into a smooth medium batter, then turn into a shallow square pan. Bake one hour and a half in a quick, steady oven. When cold, cover with a rich soft vanilla frosting. This is a famous old southern recipe.

Dutch Breadfruit Cake—Beat the yolks of 12 eggs with one-half pound of sugar, beating for half an hour; add a half pound of sweet almonds that have been blanched and mashed fine, a half pound of black bread that has been grated and moistened in a little thin vanilla syrup; add also a teaspoon of cinnamon, a half teaspoon of grated nutmeg, a quarter pound of finely chopped citron and the beaten egg whites. Mix all very smooth and bake the dough in a slow oven.

EFFECTIVE NECKWEAR

The most effective neckwear novelties are on the stock and the turnover order, says the Dry Goods Economist. In the former styles there are smart numbers of crushed velvet and of satin, as well as the newer semi-tailored effects in pique and linen. A feature of these new tailored stocks is the softness and pliability, which enable them to be worn with considerably more comfort than is ordinarily the case with this type of neckwear. In the turnovers, fine and exceedingly dainty hand-embroidered styles are shown, cleverly shaped so that they are equally attractive in appearance whether they are worn with an open or closed high suit collar.

CARAMEL ICE CREAM

Melt one cup of white sugar in an iron frying pan. Boil one quart of milk with a stick of cinnamon and pour it over the beaten yolks of six eggs, then add the caramel, and when cool, turn the mixture into the freezer, adding the beaten egg whites and a teaspoon of vanilla. Freeze and let stand two hours to ripen before using. Whipped cream is good served over this cream, or a vanilla syrup with chopped walnuts.

The STORY OF FINNAN HADDIE

Finnan haddie, or haddock, so the story goes, was caught off the Scotch coast at certain seasons of the year and salted, tasting little different from other salt fish. One day the fisherman of the village of Findon had spread their nets to dry and had prepared their haddock for salting when one of their sheds caught fire. The fisherman crowded about, says the Chicago Daily Journal, first distressed and then interested as an unfamiliar odor issued from the burning shed. At last one man got a pole and drew out of the embers the first smoked haddies; all agreed that the fish was more delicious smoked than salted, so the smoking became a regular habit. The smoked fish was long known as Findon haddock, but gradully the name acquired its present quaint pronunciation.

LEMON DRINK TO BOTTLE

(Special to The Christian Science Monitor)

Two pounds lump sugar, two lemons, one half dessertspoon tartaric acid.

Cut the rind very thinly off the lemons, so that you do not get the pith; put it in a bowl with sugar, juice of lemons and tartaric acid. Pour one quart boiling water over it. Stir to dissolve sugar.

SPONGE LAYERS FOR JELLY CAKE

Beat four eggs with a half pound of sugar and a quarter pound of flour, adding the beaten whites last. This quantity will make four layers and will be found very light and dainty. Grape-fruit marmalade is very nice to lay the cake up with.

QUEEN OF PUDDINGS

One pint of milk, one ounce of butter, one-half pint of bread crumbs, one lemon, two eggs, two ounces of sugar, two or three tablespoons jam.

Boil the milk with the butter and pour it over the bread crumbs; let it soak for a few minutes, then add yolks of two eggs, the grated rind of a lemon and the sugar. Pour into a buttered pie dish and bake till set. Take it out of the oven, spread it with jam, beat whites of eggs to a stiff froth, spread over the top and bake a pale brown. Sprinkle with sugar.

goes into one of these nests. There is plenty of room in front of the nest and when she goes in the trap door falls and the hen remains there until her egg is laid. Then by means of her leg ring we give credit to the record of the hen that laid the egg.

These leg bands are of different colors for the different ages. We also identify the birds by the system of toe punching, which is done when the chicks are taken from the incubators. Each egg is marked with the number of the pen from which it came and thus we know just how the different pens are turning out.

"If you look at some of those young birds you will see that here and there one of them is quite dingy in contrast to the others. That shows a "reversion to type." The Orpington was bred out of several breeds. One of these was the Black Dorking. Occasionally the black shows up as you see; but invariably as the birds grow older those "dusky" birds turn out to be the whitest of all.

"The Orpington is a very big bird. The female runs to 10½ pounds and the male to 13. They are unequaled as large broilers and I can always get an extra price for them. I recently sold 25 hens which averaged 10 pounds apiece for 20 cents a pound. That was $2.00 a hen. Of course the best money is made from the sale of fancy hens and roosters. The sale of eggs is a certain income but it means hard work and everything must be sacrificed to it. My birds fetch from $5 to $15 for males and show birds $20 to $50. The demand is steady and can be relied on. My birds are ready early and eastern dealers send for them; while the local market is always good."

GREATER EFFICIENCY IN THE SHOPS

A shop in Louisville, Ky., is training its saleswomen to give expert advice to customers. Much money and time are wasted through women's habit of going shopping without a definite idea of what they want to buy, and consequently having several articles sent home "on approval." When merchandise is finally returned, it is very often deteriorated in style or freshness; not only does the shop lose by this habit but the customers themselves seldom gain by it.

Women are very likely to wait until they reach the shop to decide exactly what they want; they hesitate, ask the advice of a friend, of the saleswoman, or even occasionally of a stranger. Much of this trouble might be avoided if saleswomen were able to give good advice to those customers who asked for it. A saleswoman with proper taste should be qualified to say whether a garment was becoming or whether it fitted well. Then the rule that "sent on approval" goods must be returned within 10 days would be less necessary. Frank, capable shopwomen would be an advantage, but customers ought to be able to think for themselves and think quickly. This would make for greater efficiency with all concerned.

SOME HABITS OF THE HORSE

A writer in Inland Farming relates some strange facts about the horse and the way he sleeps. Even when not confined in stalls, horses seldom lie down for more than an hour each night—that period being usually about midnight. The horse seems to prefer to rest standing up; stablemen have reported that some horses in their care have never been seen to sleep lying down. One animal had never been seen to lie down for more than 15 years. It is said that the horse sleeps "with one eye open," and is constantly on guard. His ears are continually turning and twisting so as to catch the slightest noise; not even an Indian in moccasins can approach a sleeping horse undetected.

STRANGE TO THE TOWN

A little girl whose parents had recently moved from country to town and who is now enjoying her first experience in living in a street, said: "This is a very queer place. Next door is fastened to our house."

Her younger brother added his impression by declaring: "I like to live where the sidewalks have edges."

USE OF COLORS IN FOODS

A Food Inspection decision has been issued by the department permitting the use of tartrazine in coloring food products. Investigations have shown this color to be harmless and suitable for coloring foods. It is manufactured in large quantities in the United States. Seven other coal tar dyes have been permitted in foods since the enactment of the Food and Drug Act. Samples of all dyes certified by manufacturers are examined in the Bureau of Chemistry and only such dyes permitted as are free from impurities and harmful substances.

Another decision has recently been issued making more stringent requirements in reference to the certification of coal tar dyes when mixed with substances not coal tar dyes. This decision provides that hereafter the manufacturer shall deposit with the secretary of agriculture a declaration that every package in which any such mixture is sold shall have a plain and conspicuous statement of the quantity or proportion of the certified dyes present in the mixture.

TO PREPARE GRAPES FOR SALAD

White grapes add greatly to many fruit salads, but on account of the difficulty in removing their skins, the busy hostess does not have time to prepare them. A reader of the Monitor has discovered the following method of doing this work quickly, and wishes to pass her hint on to others:

Remove the grapes from the stem, drop into boiling water, and let stand one minute. Plunge into cold water and drain. Cut a lengthwise slit in each grape and roll the skin backward. It will now come off easily, all in one piece. Remove the seeds, close the opening, and lay the grapes in a single layer on a plate. Place in the refrigerator and let stand until thoroughly cool, so that they will retain their original shape—Christian Science Monitor.

MY BED IS A BOAT

My bed is like a little boat;
Nurse helps me in when I embark;
She girds me in my sailor's coat
And starts me in the dark.

At night, I go on board and say
Good night to all my friends on shore;
I shut my eyes and sail away
And see and hear no more.

And sometimes things to bed I take,
As prudent sailors have to do;
Perhaps a slice of wedding cake,
Perhaps a toy or two.

All night across the dark we steer;
But when the day returns at last,
Safe in my room, beside the pier,
I find my vessel fast.

—Robert Louis Stevenson.

AN ASPARAGUS WINDOW GARDEN

If you want a really attractive window garden save your pennies until you can get enough to hire a tinsmith to make a window box of sheet zinc. If he make it four inches high, four and a half inches wide and 20 inches long it will be a good size for most windows. Do not make any holes in the bottom. Now get some small asparagus ferns at the florist's. You should be able to get small plants for 5 or 10 cents each. Plant these in good soil in the window box and you will soon have a very attractive show of greenery.
